RENFE designates King's Training as its new language training provider

King's Training has won the RENFE public tender to deliver its comprehensive language programme to more than 450 employees by 2020.

This week, the Spanish state-owned rail company RENFE, has awarded King's Training the role of official language training supplier over the next two years. The contract will involve the implementation of a comprehensive language programme for more than 450 employees in the company.

"We are delighted to start working with Renfe in this important project and are excited to embark on this new relationship that we trust will be fruitful for both parties," said Sarah Gessler, King's Training Director.

King's Training will teach English, German, French and Portuguese, in face-to-face individual and group format classes, virtual learning groups, business workshops and e-learning. Various teaching-learning methodologies will be used with the aim of boosting employee development and performance in the workplace.

About King's Training

King's Training has been teaching languages for over 30 years in some of the most important companies in Spain, taking advantage of the 50 years' of educational know-how of King's Group, the mother organisation which is internationally recognised for its network of British curriculum schools; King's College.

As specialists in adult language training and professional skills development, King's Training has extensive experience both in the management and development of comprehensive English training projects in large companies throughout Spain and in the training of business professionals at an individual level.

Under the motto "Learning to Make a Difference", the company's objective is for students to be able to communicate fluidly in any situation in a natural, agile and effective way. King's Training's methodology is based on the balance between study and the practical use of language, with communicative, dynamic and fun activities that motivate and prepare students to function in real situations.
