Press Release

Alicante, Wednesday 29th November 2017

More than 250 students attend the “SRT - International College Fair” at King’s College Alicante

Universities from UK, Australia, US, Canada and many other countries offered information about their courses and facilities.

Last Wednesday 29th November, King’s College Alicante hosted the SRT - International College Fair, an event in which students from all over the region had the opportunity to learn about more than 30 universities around the world. Organised by SRT, the fair was attended by more than 250 students from Alicante that are currently searching for a course and/or a university abroad.

“Trying to decide what to study and at which university can be a daunting and worrying time for students and parents, which is why these sorts of events are so important,” said Simon Wicks, Head of Secondary School at King’s College Alicante. “We are delighted to have welcomed SRT and over thirty universities from around the world, who have all helped to advise and inspire our pupils on future career choices.

They are instrumental in making our young people realise there are many more options available to them than they may first have thought. It has also been a great opportunity to reach out to our local community so that pupils of local schools could also benefit from similar conversations with a diverse set of higher education institutions”.
